WATERFRONT SEATTLE

Waterfront Seattle is rebuilding Alaskan Way between S King and Pike Streets, and has built a new street, Elliott Way, between Alaskan Way and Bell St.

The new surface street spans a total of 17 blocks from Pioneer Square to Belltown, with two lanes of traffic in either direction for the majority of the street. This street has the honorary name Dzidzilalich. Intersections and sidewalks have been carefully designed to support pedestrian accessibility. The new park promenade and two-way protected bike path will run along the west side of Alaskan Way. The southern section will include dedicated lanes for transit in and out of downtown, as well as lanes for ferry queuing onto Colman Dock. Seneca St will be rebuilt between Western Ave and Alaskan Way with new parking, landscaping, and lighting. This project will add connections to park spaces, restaurants, stores and neighborhoods, raised street crossings and widened sidewalks for pedestrians, more than 500 new street trees, extensive ground covers and green stormwater infrastructure to manage stormwater runoff on-site, and extensive pedestrian and roadway lighting.
