Bothell Urban Medium Density Residential (R-M2) is a medium-density district designed to accommodate urban growth through infill housing, including townhomes, apartments, and attached units. Following 2024–2025 updates, this zone emphasizes increased density, minimum density requirements, and, in some cases, allows for high-density, multi-family developments of 12 or more units on standard lots.

Bothell, WA is a fast-growing Eastside city with a diverse, well-educated population of over 50,000 and strong household incomes. The community includes a mix of young professionals, families, and an increasingly international population, supporting a skilled workforce in tech, healthcare, and professional services.

The local economy is anchored by biotech, life sciences, and technology, with a strong concentration of research, lab, and advanced manufacturing users. Major employers and nearby corporate campuses in Bothell and along the I-405 corridor provide a stable, high-paying job base, while the presence of the University of Washington Bothell helps sustain a steady talent pipeline. In addition, continued investment in downtown redevelopment and mixed-use projects is driving new retail, housing, and small business growth, reinforcing Bothell's transition into a more urban, employment-driven submarket.

The city offers an active lifestyle with parks, trails, and a revitalized downtown, while its location along I-405 provides excellent connectivity to Seattle, Bellevue, and Redmond, making it ideal for both businesses and commuters.
